Place: Lucy Stone Hall, Room B-116, Livingston Campus

COURSE DESCRIPTION:
The course introduces the students to the study of folklore with specific reference to the folk tales of the Middle East. While the bulk of the folk tales examined will consist of those collected during the course of the 20th century, the course will also present these tales in a diachronic light with reference to the sacred texts of each community and comparable myths, legends, tales, and fables from the ancient world.

The folklore examined include creation myths, beast fables, proverbs, ghost stories, fairy tales, and Middle Eastern reflexes of such well known tales as the Faust legend, Cinderella, Snow White, and Sleeping Beauty.

Grades will be determined by participation (10%), the mid-term (20%), a final paper (30%), and the final exam (40%). At the beginning of each class, students will be expected to recant one of the tales covered in the reading for the class, without reference to notes. Students should develop their paper topic in consultation with the instructor.

LEARNING OBJECTIVES:
We will address:

- The various schools of interpretation, such as the Myth and Ritual, the Formalist, the Functionalist, and the Psychoanalytical. You will learn to analyze folklore with an eye for origins, typological or formal parallels, and potential functions within the societies in which it is current.
- Theoretical questions of orality v. textuality, folk vs. elite traditions, vernacular vs. official histories, and other aspects of the composition, transmission, and consumption of folklore, not only within specific cultures but also cross-culturally.

PREREQUISITES: None.
